

BASF Aktiengesellschaft

January 29, 2001
NAE19990412US IB/HN/cv

5

Abstract

A process for working up hydroxylamine-containing solutions as obtained in particular in the electronics industry during the cleaning of electronic components is described. According to the invention, the hydroxylamine is stripped from the wastewater with steam. The products obtained are aqueous hydroxylamine and an aqueous solution of the amines. Both product streams can be purified in further process steps to give a saleable product.

15 (Fig. 1)